AMERICAN AND CANADIAN STUDENTS IN RELATION TO THE WORLD-WIDE EXPANSION OF CHRISTIANITY

A QUADRENNIUM IN THE LIFE AND WORK OF THE STUDENT VOLUNTEER MOVEMENT

for foreign missions. International convent 7th, Kansas City, 1913-1914.

Report of the Executive Committee
Presented at the Seventh International Convention,
Kansas City, December 31, 1913 to January 4, 1914

THE AMERICAN AND CANADIAN STUDENTS IN RELATION TO THE WORLD-WIDE EXPANSION OF CHRISTIANITY.

"It is a holy sight," said Disraeli, "to see a nation saved by its youth." Is it not a more inspiring sight to see the students of the North American Continent dedicating themselves to the sublime undertaking of making Jesus Christ known, loved and obeyed throughout the entire non-Christian world? The Student Volunteer Movement for Foreign Missions, called into being nearly a generation ago under the influence of the mighty working of the Spirit of God, has already profoundly impressed the religious life of the colleges of the United States and Canada, widely influenced the missionary life of the Churches, and furnished to the Mission Boards the greatest offering of lives ever made in one generation by two Christian nations. The simple but highly significant purpose of this Movement is, in the first place, to furnish the Mission Boards of the United States and Canada with a supply of capable student volunteers sufficient to meet the demands made upon them in the effort to give all living men the opportunity to know the living Christ; and, secondly, to lead the students whom God does not call to become missionaries to make their lives count most as clergymen and laymen in developing in North America a strong home base for world-wide missions and in backing up that enterprise in all ways within their power.

While related organically to the Student Young Men's and Young Women's Christian Associations, the Volunteer Movement exists primarily to serve the Foreign Missionary Societies of the North American Churches. In carrying out its two-fold object it has developed methods and agencies which have enabled it to render increasingly valuable service. Among these means one of the most potent is the Quadrennial Volunteer Convention. These Conventions, which are the largest and most representative gatherings of Christian students held anywhere in the world, have literally marked epochs in the missionary life of the American and Canadian colleges. They afford the one opportunity we have to realize and to accentuate the spiritual solidarity of the complex and varied Christian forces of the wide student field of this Continent. They make it possible also to review together the progress made during the preceding student generation of four years and to set before ourselves tasks to engage us in the years to come. As we now let pass before us the outstanding facts of progress during the last quadrennium, we shall recognize clearly that it has surpassed in fruitfulness any corresponding period in the life of the Movement.

I. Progress Made During the Last Quadrennium

The distinctive purpose of the Volunteer Movement is to secure student volunteers who will actually go forth from the United States and Canada and spend their lives in non-Christian lands in the work of establishing Christ's Kingdom. The supreme and only sufficient test by which it should be tried and judged is its efficiency in this vital respect. It is a ground for sincere gratitude, therefore, that within the lifetime of the Movement 5,882 of its members have sailed. They have gone out to the foreign field under the auspices of over seventy missionary agencies, practically all being connected with the recognized Missionary Societies of the various Christian Communions of the United States and Canada. They are distributed throughout the non-Christian world as follows:

Africa	638
Arabia	26
Central America	40
China	1,739
India, Burma and Ceylon	1,133
Japan and Korea	743
Latin and Greek Countries of Europe	28
Mexico	168
Oceania	67
Persia	51
Philippine Islands	163
Siam, Laos and Straits Settlements	104
South America	359
Turkish Empire	221
West Indies	177
Other Countries	225
	5,882

Most gratifying is the fact that during the four years which have elapsed since the Rochester Convention 1,466 volunteers have sailed. This is a far larger number than have gone out during any preceding quadrennium. It exceeds the number who sailed during the first twelve years of the life of the Movement. It is interesting to note that nearly twice as many student volunteers have gone out from the United States and Canada during the last four years as from the universities and colleges of all the other Christian nations combined. A study of the record blanks of these sailed volunteers, as well as conversations and correspondence with many of them, reveals that in nearly every case the Volunteer Movement was an important if not the principal factor in influencing them to become missionaries.

Not a few volunteers are hindered from pressing to the front: some owing to personal responsibilities with reference to their families; some owing to their inability to comply with the physical, intellectual and other requirements of the Boards; some owing to personal debts or other financial problems; and some to lack of consecration and force of character. On the whole, however, the strongest appreciation should be expressed with reference to the determination and persistence of so many volunteers, who in the face of serious opposition and discouragement have persevered until they have realized their volunteer purpose. It is this spirit of steadfastness and heroism which constitutes the real glory of the Movement. It would be difficult to overstate the value of the many obstacles which confront volunteers, viewing these as means of purifying their motives, solidifying their purpose, developing their character, strengthening their faith, calling out their latent energies and thus preparing them to grapple more successfully with the most serious difficulties and problems which await them on the mission field.

Without doubt, one of the secrets of the going forth of this continuous and expanding stream of volunteers is the fact that the leaders of the Movement, its recruiting officers, continue to press to the front. At Rochester we were able to state that of the volunteers who had been traveling secretaries sixty-four had sailed, four only had been rejected by the Boards because they lacked necessary qualifications, three were still in course of preparation and two were detained by the Boards for special service. Of the twenty-nine different traveling secretaries who have served the Movement since the convention at Rochester twelve have sailed; one is under appointment; four are detained temporarily on account of health; two are still carrying on preparatory studies, and ten are members of the present staff of the Movement, and on completing their preparation will proceed to the field.

The Candidates Department of the Movement, established under the inspiring leadership of Dr. Zwemer, has been carried forward by Mr. W. B. Smith during the last four years to a stage of very high efficiency. Now that he lays down this work to press out to India in fulfillment of his life purpose, we wish to express appreciation of the masterly way in which he has conducted this part of the work. The purpose of this Department is to bring the qualified candidate, whether he be a volunteer or non-volunteer, in touch with the position to be filled on the mission field. It seeks to present concrete or definite calls to students who are now actually qualified to go to the front. It serves, therefore, as an indispensable clearing house between the source of supply, that is, the prepared students, and the demand, that is, the needs on the various fields as known and emphasized by the Mission Boards. It has enabled the Movement to become more and more of practical service to the Boards. Of this fact they have borne recent emphatic testimony. Its helpful relationship to the Boards has been greatly facilitated by the coöperation of the candidate secretaries of the various General and Women's Boards, who come together from time to time to discuss with the Movement this side of its work.

General bulletins or lists of calls, setting forth in a clear and orderly way the requirements of the different Societies, are issued at least twice a year, and circulated widely among the institutions of North America. Besides these, certain special denominational lists are published, and also circulars calling attention to certain specific openings on the foreign field.

Wide use is made of periodicals which will help to bring the needs of the Boards to the attention of students and graduates. The hundreds of secretaries of the Student Young Men's and Young Women's Christian Associations, as well as over six hundred other trusted correspondents, are used to help discover men and women required to meet the specific needs of the different Boards. The many student conferences are also utilized as opportunities for the discovery of suitable candidates. An extensive correspondence is conducted from the central office. Last year the candidate secretary communicated with eight thousand different persons and as a result was able to submit to the Missionary Societies the names of over five hundred suitable candidates. This work is of the greatest possible value to the Mission Boards. It has greatly increased the number of persons from whom they can choose candidates. It influences many to decide to become missionaries, because some of the strongest young men and women are most influenced by a call to some definite post. Moreover, it helps to hold many volunteers to their life purpose who might otherwise become lost to the missionary movement. Above all and through all it makes possible the much more prompt manning of critically important positions.

During the last four years a larger number of new volunteers has been enrolled than during any corresponding period in the history of the colleges of North America. This is all the more remarkable because the recruiting methods of the Movement have become more conservative from year to year; and because experience has shown that it has become more difficult in recent years to secure candidates owing to the multiplying demands and attractions for workers on the home field. It should be a source of encouragement and thanksgiving for all to know that the present student generation is not lacking in willingness to respond to the heroic appeal and to the stern requirements of missionary service.

Next to the persistent personal work of the volunteers themselves, the principal agency for securing new recruits has been that of the traveling secretaries of the Movement. As a result of the larger vision and larger initiative of the Nashville and Rochester Conventions, we have been enabled during the last eight years to double the number of traveling secretaries. This in turn has made possible the reaching of many more colleges and universities and of laying more effective siege to the principal student centers. With our present staff we are able to make each year over five hundred visits to some four hundred different institutions. We cannot speak too highly of the wonderful influence which has been exerted by these devoted and able workers who have come with their deeply moving message, pressing upon successive generations of students the surpassing claims of Christ and His world-wide plans. Where the conditions have been favorable for the manifestation of the Divine Presence and working, these occasions have frequently marked the beginning of new epochs in the spiritual life as well as the missionary fruitfulness of the colleges.

In this immediate connection emphatic reference should be made to the invaluable service rendered to the missionary work of the Church by the traveling and local student secretaries of the Young Men's Christian Associations and Young Women's Christian Associations. Under their leadership these agencies have become increasingly fruitful missionary auxiliaries. In view of their unique opportunity it is not surprising that some of these workers, who are dominated by the missionary purpose, have been able to accomplish results second only to those of the recruiting officers of the Volunteer Movement.

The many conferences held in the student field of North America have also been tributary to the expanding missionary interest and consecration of the present student generation. The Rochester Convention, which ushered in the last quadrennium, exerted an even more profound influence on the student field of North America than any of its predecessors, and this is saying much, for we have not yet begun to see the end of the influence exerted by the conventions at Nashville, Toronto, Cleveland and Detroit. Besides these great international official gatherings of the Movement, there have been inaugurated in different parts of the field, under the initiative of the volunteers themselves, many state, provincial or district volunteer conferences. Last year, for example, there were held as many as thirty-two such gatherings attended by an aggregate of 4,415 student delegates from 468 institutions. When wisely planned, ably led and properly correlated with the other Christian activities in the student field, these more informal meetings have often furnished the occasion for demonstrations of spiritual power and have kindled missionary fires in many places.

Without doubt, however, far more productive in permanent missionary results have been the various summer and winter conferences of the Christian Association Movements of North America. At least sixteen gatherings of this kind are held each year, attended by over 6,000 carefully selected student delegates. As a rule these conferences continue for ten days. This makes possible intensive work. Over seventy-five percent. of the delegates from year to year receive systematic training for the leadership of the mission study classes and for the other missionary activities of the colleges. Moreover, experience shows that these conferences yield a surprisingly large number of the strongest volunteers.

A most fundamental activity of the Volunteer Movement is the promotion of mission study. This underlies and makes possible the largest and most satisfactory achievements in other directions, such as enlisting new recruits, training missionary candidates, the preparation of intelligent leaders for the home base, the promotion of missionary giving, and the multiplying of missionary intercessors. It means much, therefore, to be able to state that within the last four years there has been an increase in the number of young men and young women in mission study classes in the colleges from 29,300 to 40,400. This addition of 11,000 or of nearly forty percent. represents one of the greatest advances ever made. It equals the expansion made during the first twelve years of the history of the Mission Study Department of the Movement. When we remember that at the time this feature of the work was introduced in the year 1894 there were not more than 200 students enlisted in the thirty mission study groups then in existence, the fact that we now have about 2,700 mission study circles in over 700 different institutions is indeed highly significant. The increase of the recent years has been shared by all classes of institutions; but the most encouraging advance has been made in the theological seminaries, where there has been an increase of some sixty per cent., and in the medical schools, which report an increase of one hundred percent. It should be pointed out that of the 40,000 students thus engaged in the investigation and discussion of missionary subjects fully seven-eighths are non-volunteers. This fact in itself is indicative of a great change which has taken place in recent years, and gives promise of a leadership of the Christian forces which will be intelligently sympathetic with the missionary program of Christianity.

Satisfactory progress has been made in the production of new courses of mission study. Among the most helpful and most widely used courses recently issued by the Movement are "The Unoccupied Mission Fields" by Zwemer, "South American Problems" by Speer, "The Chinese Revolution" by Brown, "Educational Missions" by Barton (the first of a series of works to deal with the main branches of missionary service), and "The Decisive Hour of Christian Missions." In this connection attention should be called to the most notable book published by the Movement, the one issued in connection with Commission I. of the Edinburgh Missionary Conference, "The World Atlas of Christian Missions."

Even more important than the marked increase in the number engaged in mission study and the advance recorded in the production of new courses has been the steady improvement in the quality of the mission study work. This is due primarily to the strong emphasis placed upon the qualitative aspect of the work by the leaders of the Mission Study Department. More attention has been given to the selection and training of teachers for study groups, especially at the summer conferences. The literature on the subject has been enriched. The coöperation of college and seminary professors has become more general and helpful. The attention paid to such subjects in the curriculum of our institutions has also had an indirect but strong influence. Moreover, the closer correlation of mission study and the Bible study and social problems study has contributed in a marked degree to the improvements of all these activities.

On an occasion like this it is fitting that attention should be called to the remarkable development of mission study throughout the Churches as a result of the wise and aggressive propaganda of the Missionary Education Movement, of the Central Committee of United Study of Missions of Women's Boards, and also of the Laymen's Missionary Movement. It will be recalled that the Volunteer Movement was the principal contributary cause leading to the inauguration of these three beneficent enterprises. In any true estimate, therefore, of the influence of the Volunteer Movement one should not lose sight of its great indirect services to the missionary enterprise.

From its earliest days the Volunteer Movement has emphasized the financial responsibility of undergraduates. It has believed that it is literally true that where one's treasure is there one's heart is also. During the last year the colleges and seminaries secured $220,804 for missionary objects, of which about one-half was contributed by the students themselves and the rest was secured by them from the professors and immediate friends. This is of course in addition to what the students and professors give in connection with the Churches they attend. It represents an increase of over sixty percent. in the gifts reported for the year preceding the Rochester Convention. Over one hundred institutions are each subscribing $300 or more. Among the institutions which are giving most largely are Yale, Princeton, the University of Toronto, the University of Pennsylvania, Oberlin, the University of Michigan, and the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary. The institutions whose members are giving most per capita are The Misses Masters School, where the gifts last year averaged $15; the Groton School, where the average was $17, and Auburn Theological Seminary, where the average was $8. The institutions which have had a mission station, a college, a missionary, or some other special object to support have kept up their giving steadily, and, as a rule, have increased their annual gifts; but those which have not had such special objects have been more spasmodic in their giving, and in several cases have even ceased to make missionary gifts. It is gratifying to know that by far the larger part of the student contributions is given through the regular Mission Boards.

The chief value of missionary giving in the colleges and seminaries is seen not so much in the amount of money which is thus obtained for the missionary cause, although this now represents the equivalent of the support of possibly one hundred and fifty missionaries, as in the influence which this practice exerts upon the future attitude and activities of the students. Among their number are not a few of the sons and daughters of the wealthy. These will some day inherit and administer vast sums of money which if related to the plans of the expanding Kingdom of Christ may accomplish untold good. Others will some day through their own efforts be in a position to wield large financial power, and, as a result of the habit formed in student days, will use this power in furthering the missionary work of the Church. Thousands of those now giving will some day be pastors in charge of Churches and will then apply the same principles with reference to the support of missionaries and missionary institutions as those which they have become accustomed to use in their student days. Tens of thousands of the present student givers to missions will later become leaders of the lay forces of the Church, and, with their practical missionary interest, will be in a position to augment greatly the financial support of the missionary enterprise.

While concentrating all of its attention and energy upon its direct propaganda, the Student Volunteer Movement has had a profound reflex influence on the religious life of the students of the universities and colleges of North America. In summoning successive generations of Christian students to consider the world claims of Christianity, it has indirectly promoted among them conclusive thinking with reference to their life-work problems. In influencing thousands to dedicate themselves to foreign missionary service, it has at the same time indirectly influenced even greater numbers to devote their lives to some other form of Christian service as a life work. Countless young men and young women, who have felt that they could not go abroad, have resolved that they would devote themselves to Christian service at home. It is the very genius of the Movement to bring students into right relation to Jesus Christ as Lord. Nearly all Christian students had come to know Christ as Saviour, but many had not been led to recognize Him as the Lord or Master of their lives. The Volunteer Movement has been even more concerned in influencing them to acknowledge His sovereign sway than in urging them to decide to serve Him in any particular part of His world-wide Kingdom. It has thus afforded a challenge for every Christian student for testing his devotion to Christ. Nothing could be more valuable to a man than to be obliged to answer the question whether his loyalty to Christ is limited and fractional or thorough-going, complete and absolute. Whether he becomes a student volunteer or not, the experience of facing this question fearlessly and honestly is of the greatest possible help. The Movement in sounding out the missionary call has promoted reality in Christian experience in every college which it has touched. Its appeal tries men's motives as by fire and exposes relentlessly all sham and hypocrisy.

Through all the years, and never more than in the recent past, the Movement has emphasized the vital processes. Some think that it has done more than any other one factor to develop the prayer life of the colleges. All over the field it has raised up and trained intelligent and faithful intercessors. It has widened and intensified the prayer life of every student who has come under its direct influence. The wide observance of the Morning Watch is traceable in large part to the constant emphasis placed upon this life-expanding habit by the secretaries and members of the Movement. The study of inspiring Christian biographies and of the most dynamic devotional literature has also been widely promoted in the same way.

Who can estimate the influence of the Movement in maintaining and extending the influence of the Christian faith in our universities? Without doubt it has exerted a profound apologetic influence. This it has done through acquainting men with Christianity as a present-day, vital, world-wide, triumphant force. It has done so also by showing through its missionary studies not only the total inadequacy of the non-Christian religions, but also the absolute sufficiency of pure Christianity. It is well to remember that only a Christianity powerful enough to conquer the minds and hearts of the followers of the non-Christian religions in Asia and Africa can show itself able to meet the deepest needs in the lives of the students of North America. Moreover, the influence of the example of the volunteers thinking enough of their own religion to go forth with conviction to propagate it in the very homes of the non-Christian religions, is in itself an apologetic of the very highest order and has been used by God to lead many an open-minded and honest unbelieving student to investigate afresh the claims of Christianity and to yield to these claims.

The student missionary uprising has been a mighty help in the direction of counteracting the perils of our modern college life. At a time when growing luxury, self-indulgence and the tendency to softness are manifesting themselves in our colleges, it is well that we have a Movement which makes such an appeal to the heroic, which summons men to such a stern and rugged self-discipline, and which assigns to them such stupendous tasks.

The influence of the Movement on the home Church has also been both wide and deep. It has inspired thousands of young men, who are to lead the home Churches, with the world vision and the world passion, and influenced them to make their lives tell for the realization of Christ's world program. In giving to the Mission Boards year after year such a priceless offering of lives dedicated to the missionary career, the Movement has presented to the Christian Church a most compelling appeal or challenge for its generosity, sacrifice and fellowship in prayer. In doing so much also to bind together in true friendship the future leaders of all of our Christian Communions the Movement has become one of the greatest, if not the greatest, factor in realizing the prayer of our Lord that we all may be one.

It should be emphasized that once a student volunteer, always a student volunteer. It is a striking fact that the students, who under the spell of this Movement are led to offer themselves for missionary service and go out to the foreign field, never lose the original impulse. The ideals, principles and spirit which did so much to determine their life purpose continue in a remarkable degree to dominate their attitude and practice. The discerning traveler in mission lands today is impressed by the fact that the old volunteers have become a tremendous force in nearly all these fields. There are now on the foreign field approximately seven thousand five hundred volunteers who have gone out from North America, the British Isles, the Continent of Europe and the Christian lands of the Southern Hemisphere. On only one mission field, that is, Japan, are they organized; but in many other fields they assemble each year in greater or less numbers at hill stations and in conferences. Nearly all of them during their furloughs renew their touch with the Movement at home, and by means of periodicals, correspondence and intercession preserve a more or less intimate relation to it.

One is conscious in meeting these volunteers, even in the most isolated places, that there is a spiritual solidarity among them. They seem to understand each other, and from widely differing angles are working together toward certain great common goals. A careful study of the missionary conferences held on the different fields as well as at home shows clearly that the volunteers have become a recognized factor in the development of missionary policy. Their influence is thrown strongly on the side of increasing the efficiency of the missionary enterprise in all its parts. From their ranks have risen some of the outstanding missionary statesmen of our day. They have had a leading part in nearly every notable movement on the foreign field for more than a decade. By life practices as well as by word they have stood for the spiritual emphasis in mission work. On every field can be seen the influence which the watchword has had upon them and through them upon others. It is observable in the way in which they have sought to communicate this ideal and motive to the native Christian students. It is recognized in the way in which they have emphasized the importance of the adequate occupation of the field, a good illustration being the initiative given to the recent remarkable study made in Japan on the distribution of the forces. It is seen again in the countless appeals which they have individually and collectively sent back to the students and Churches at the home base emphasizing the urgency of the situation.

The volunteers now at the front have also become the greatest single human force in the promotion of coöperation and unity. It would be strange were this not the case. Here are over seven thousand able men and women who during their student days, though belonging to different Christian communions and nationalities, worked together as members of a common Movement, animated with a common objective. In that plastic, vision-forming period they learned to respect, trust and love each other. Now they stand face to face with a task so stupendous, so difficult and so urgent, that they are convinced that they are necessary to each other, that nothing less than a policy and practice of coöperation and a spirit of Christlike oneness will prevail. On every field, therefore, they may be found in the forefront in all wise, constructive efforts to draw together the Christian forces. Moreover, their indirect influence on the cause of unity at the home base is destined to be both extensive and profound.

For a number of years the Student Volunteer Movement of the United States and Canada was the only organization of its kind in all the student world. Under the influence of one of its founders a similar Movement was later developed as an organized force in the British universities. Still later the volunteer idea was transplanted, either from North America or from the British Isles, to many other lands, such as the Scandinavian countries, Germany, Holland, Switzerland, Australasia and South Africa. The North American Movement has never lost its deep interest in these sister Movements, but continues to follow their development with keen and prayerful interest. It is appropriate, therefore, on this occasion that attention be called to some of the more recent facts bearing upon their activities and influence.

The Student Volunteer Missionary Union of Great Britain and Ireland has from the beginning been a mighty factor in the missionary life of the British universities and of the British Empire. Over eighteen hundred of its members have sailed, this being a larger proportion of the total number than in the case of our own Movement. Each year between two and three hundred new volunteers are enrolled, although it is reported that there has recently been a slight falling off. Each year about one hundred complete their preparation and sail. The number in mission study circles ranges between 1,600 and 2,000. Among the most effective text books recently produced and most widely used are "The Renaissance in India," by Andrews; "The Outcaste's Hope," by Phillips, and "The Missionary Motive." The Fifth Quadrennial Conference of the Union was held just two years ago at Liverpool. It differed from the preceding gatherings in that it dealt with the social problems of the home field as well as with the needs and opportunities of the foreign field, thus emphasizing the solidarity and interdependence of the work of Christ at home and abroad. In the recent reorganization of their work steps have been taken to make the general Christian Student Movement of the British Isles responsible for promoting missionary interest and intelligence among all classes of students, and to have the Volunteer Union concentrate on recruiting volunteers and facilitating their preparation. This Union has rendered a unique service in promoting unity among the Christian forces of the British Isles. It has also through its quadrennial conferences greatly stimulated the missionary and general religious life and activity of the universities of the Continent.

The Student Missionary Movement in Germany, in the face of very great difficulties, has continued to carry forward its helpful activities. It has thus far enrolled about 110 volunteers, of whom over sixty have already sailed, nine going out during the last year. It has about 400 students in mission study circles. Last April it held its Fifth Triennial Conference at Halle. There were present over 900 delegates or twice as many as ever before. This conference made a profound impression upon all who were present and has greatly quickened the missionary interest in a number of the leading universities. The recent visit by Dr. Zwemer and many addresses given by other missionary authorities have helped to develop the interest. In view of the fact that such a very small fraction of the candidates sent out by the German Missionary Societies have been students, the development of this Student Missionary Movement is of the greatest possible importance to the future of German missions and the German Churches.

Within the last four years the Volunteer Movement has been organized in the Swiss universities. It has enrolled over thirty volunteers, a few of whom have already sailed. It is confined largely to French-speaking Switzerland, but it is hoped that it will soon spread more widely among the German-speaking universities of the country. A few scores have been enlisted in mission study. A most important missionary conference, which will deal also with the social problems, is now being organized and will be the first of its kind ever held in this field.

In Holland a Student Missionary Movement has been established which includes not only those who plan to go to the mission field, but others who are especially interested in missionary questions. It has less than one hundred members in all. It is reported that fourteen of the Dutch students have sailed since the beginning of their Student Movement. Encouraging results in mission study are being secured.

The universities of Norway, Sweden, Denmark and Finland have for years been centres of missionary interest. In recent years much more attention has been given to the study and discussion of missionary questions. Although the Volunteer Movement in an organized form exists in only part of the universities, especially those of Denmark and Finland, the number of students who have sailed from Scandinavian universities has been greater during the last decade or two than during earlier periods. The most notable event of the past year was the Student Missionary Conference at Gothenburg, Sweden, attended by nearly 200 students from different Scandinavian countries.

In the French universities there has recently been developed a promising force known as the Volunteers of Christ. Those who belong to this Movement seek to develop and express the missionary spirit in whatever career they may undertake, or in whatever field they may be called to work. While it is not an extensive Movement, it has already exerted a deep influence. In Hungary and also in Austria there are the beginnings of Missionary Movements. The students are interesting themselves chiefly in the Mohammedan problem in the Near East.

The Student Volunteer Movement of Australasia is one of the most promising in the world. Although its student field is not extensive, it has up to the present time enrolled between three and four hundred volunteers of whom 106 have already sailed. Last year more new volunteers were enrolled than in any preceding year. There is growing interest in mission study, there being a total enrollment last year of 734. Largely under the influence of this Movement the Laymen's Missionary Movement was introduced into Australasia. The two organizations work in the closest possible coöperation and actually join in deputation work in the Churches. The Volunteer Movement of Australasia is doing more than any other in the world to promote the missionary spirit in the Churches of the country. Its activity is a splendid illustration of how a comparatively small company of earnest students can impress the spirit and policy of the Church throughout an entire nation.

The Volunteer Movement in South Africa has also accomplished a work in some respects quite as remarkable as the one in Australasia and New Zealand. It was established in the same year (1896). It has enrolled over 300 volunteers, of whom nearly 100 have already gone to the mission field. It has recently appointed a Candidates Secretary with reference to meeting more fully the demands of the Missionary Societies. The missionary conference held recently at Worcester was a gathering of great power. The students of the native colleges and schools of South Africa are also being summoned to devote themselves more largely to the work of Christ among their own people. A burden of responsibility is being placed upon the Movement of South Africa to have a larger part in meeting and resisting the Moslem advance.

One of the most remarkable developments among the students of foreign lands during the last four years has been the organization in China of the Chinese Student Volunteer Movement for the Ministry. This Movement has been raised up in answer to prayer to help solve the greatest problem of the Church in China, that of securing a sufficient number of well-qualified native students for the Christian ministry. Without such able leaders the Church cannot minister successfully to the educated classes of China. In view of the special difficulty involved in securing this kind of men for the leadership of the Churches, it was decided to limit this Movement to those who would volunteer to become Christian ministers. The declaration therefore reads, "It is my purpose, if God permit, to become a minister." The Watchword of the Movement is "The evangelization of our mother country and the world in this generation." From the beginning, the principal traveling secretary has been Pastor Ding Li-mei, in whose wonderful work in some of the colleges of North China the Movement may be said to have originated. He has gone as a flame of fire among the students of ten or more of the provinces. As a rule he has remained in a college long enough for an unhurried visit—long enough for the fires to kindle and burn. Each year, during the past three years, from 150 to 250 volunteers have been secured. Never before in a non-Christian land has there been such an offering of strong students for the Christian ministry.

In some of the colleges the volunteers include a majority of the ablest students of the upper classes.

Among the score of volunteer bands already established in China are some which in size, character of personnel and spiritual power are the equal of any of the student volunteer bands which have ever existed in our North American colleges. Although these Chinese volunteers are subjected to the strongest possible pressure to enter lucrative callings in Government or commercial pursuits, practically none of them have turned their backs upon their missionary purpose. The indirect influence of their example has been such as to lead many of the Chinese students who are to enter other callings to do so with a genuinely unselfish spirit and with a determination to make their lives also count in the evangelization of China. The Chinese Volunteer Movement, as an organic department of the Student Young Men's Christian Association, exists primarily to serve the Christian Church. It emphasizes the absolute necessity of securing the most thorough preparation in order that the leaders of the Church may be qualified to meet the unprecedented opportunities now presented in all parts of China. The Christian students in North America should remember with special intercession this uprising of Chinese Christian students. We should also pray that in the not distant future there may be developed similar Movements among the students of India, Japan and other parts of the non-Christian world. The remarkable Conference of Indian Christian students held last winter at Serampore, a gathering which did so much to Indianize the Christian Student Movement in that vast field, the activities of the Indian National Missionary Association, and the recent consecration of Mr. Azariah as the first Indian bishop, have done much to inspire the Christian students of India with the spirit of service and to facilitate the development of a Volunteer Movement in that part of the world.

The World's Student Christian Federation, which embraces not only the Volunteer Movements, but the more comprehensive Christian Student Movements of all lands, has continued to go from strength to strength. Through its name and world-wide field, through its missionary objective and activities it serves as a constant reminder to the students of all lands of the world relations of Christianity. More than any other influence, unless it be possibly the advocacy of the Watchword, the Federation has helped to hold in prominence in the thought of the students of our generation their responsibility to make the reign of Christ co-extensive with the inhabited earth. During the last quadrennium there have been added to the constituent Movements of the Federation 300 student Associations with over 20,000 members, until now the Federation embraces over 2,300 Christian Associations with a total membership of 156,000 students and professors.

During this period the Federation has held two of its most notable conferences—the one in 1911 at Constantinople, within the gates of the Moslem world, which opened the way to a wonderful expansion of the Student Movement in the Near East, both within and outside the Oriental Churches; the other last June at Lake Mohonk, which through its personnel, representing over forty nations, did so much to make the Federation and its world mission vivid and real to the students of North America. In binding together the Christian students of all lands and races, and in concentrating their attention and activities on bringing the power of the universities and colleges to bear upon the problem of the evangelization and Christianization of the whole world, the Federation is rendering a service to Christian missions which is of so great importance that discerning leaders of the Church speak of it as one of the most remarkable facts of modern times.

II. Points to Be Emphasized During the Next Year

The greatest demand made upon the Volunteer Movement today is that of furnishing a much larger number of well-qualified volunteers. In fact, this demand is more insistent than ever before. The appeal comes from every mission field and is supported by virtually every Missionary Society. Why are many more volunteers required? They are needed in order to fill the vacant places in the missionary staff occasioned by death, or by permanent withdrawal from the field owing to ill-health or other providential reasons. They are needed in order to relieve from impossible strain the present missionary force which in all quarters of the world is so fearfully undermanned. The strain is due not so much to impending failure as to recent remarkable triumphs. This suggests that more volunteers are demanded in order that the Church may safeguard the great expansion of its missionary work which has taken place recently in so many countries. More missionaries should be sent out at once in order to make more productive the colleges, hospitals and other departments of the missionary enterprise. A careful study of the missionary movement today gives one the impression that a relatively small addition to the existing staff would result in greatly augmenting the spiritual results.

It is inspiring to add that many more volunteers should be forthcoming to press the present unparallelled advantage which the Christian Church now has in the Far East and in the Near East, in Southern Asia and in Africa, and in other regions. Without doubt it is true that Christianity has never before had such a combination of opportunities among both primitive and cultured races. It must be remembered also that the era of higher specialization on which the missionary movement has entered demands in itself a great increase in the number of missionaries. There is so much to do in the non-Christian world today that the task cannot be accomplished save by a vast enlargement of the native Christian forces. This in turn calls for an increase in the number of missionaries in order that there may be raised up and trained in the immediate future the necessary staff of capable native Christian workers. The very enlargement of the native Christian community requires an enlargement of the missionary staff, that these rising, plastic native Churches may be wisely developed at this most critical stage in their life.

No convention like this, moreover, should overlook the fact that there are still many totally unoccupied fields. We would sound out the call for students of heroic spirit to become pioneers in these lands where Christ has not been named. Our Watchword demands a vast consecration of the lives of the students of our day to the work of world evangelization; because it is our fixed and unalterable purpose to give all men now living an adequate opportunity to know the Living Christ. To accomplish this calls for nothing less than an uprising far surpassing that wonderful offering in the first two years of the life of the Movement. What event could take place which would do so much to quicken the life and faith of our colleges and universities, in fact, of all the Churches of the United States and Canada, as the dedication of an unprecedented number of the choicest men and women to the carrying out of the sublime purposes of our Lord and Saviour for all mankind? At a time like this when the facts and forces of our material world are presenting such a colossal and dazzling appeal to the student class, it is necessary for the spiritual welfare of the colleges that the world-claims of Christ be pressed as never before.

Our student centres are well able to supply this great increase in the number of volunteers so imperatively needed. We have not yet begun to realize the missionary possibilities of the institutions of higher learning in North America. The complete and convincing proof of this is the example of what certain universities and theological seminaries have done and are doing. If other institutions similarly situated would do as well we would have far more than enough volunteers forthcoming to meet every requirement. In one sense, therefore, this matter of securing a sufficient number of suitable volunteers reduces itself on the human side to a matter of mathematics. It involves, possibly, a doubling of the present force of traveling secretaries of our Movement. If the present staff by visiting 400 institutions are able to set in motion influences resulting in a certain number of volunteers, then if arrangements can be made to double the number of visits, and, if possible, to do more siege work at certain institutions, there should be a corresponding increase in the number of missionary candidates. Moreover, experience shows that certain summer conferences and other student conferences and institutes yield a disproportionately large number of volunteers. The causes for this result should be carefully studied, and similar principles, methods and influences should be applied to the other gatherings.

The missionary fruitage secured by some of the local and traveling secretaries of the Association Movements suggests what large results in the aggregate would follow if the other workers possessing similar or greater opportunities were to recognize and accept their responsibility for becoming enlargers of the Kingdom. Everything which has been stated regarding the need of expanding several-fold the number of earnest students of missions takes on added meaning in this immediate connection, for it is more evident than ever that widening missionary intelligence is a necessary precursor to large and satisfactory results in recruiting work. Back of all that has been said lies the need that the leaders of this Movement and all others who are to have a large part in recruiting work make a more careful study of the problems of vocational guidance, and of the psychological aspects of the work of recruiting. They should make a fresh examination of the soundest motives of appeal, of the wisest ways of appeal, of the dangers and human limitations of appeal, and of the lessons of history and present-day experience in securing Christian workers.

Lest a misleading impression may be left by what has been said concerning the mathematical and human aspects of this vital problem, it should be emphasized with full conviction that the securing of the workers needed for the expansion of Christianity is primarily and essentially a superhuman matter. It is the sovereign work of the Spirit of the Living God to separate men unto the work whereunto He has called them. Unless, therefore, the recruiting secretaries, the Association secretaries, the Christian professors and teachers, and the student volunteers devote themselves to this infinitely important work with a sense of conscious and humble dependence upon Him, and wield with conscientiousness and earnestness the irresistible forces of intercession, we shall absolutely fail to discover and enlist the army of student volunteers demanded in this generation of unique opportunity.

The state universities and other higher educational institutions under government control should be made far more largely than at present missionary strongholds and propagating centers. This class of institutions includes a majority of the largest universities. The number of students in them is increasing much more rapidly than in the denominational colleges. A greater proportion of the students than is generally realized are Christians. They are open-minded, aggressive, honest of purpose, and possess much decision of character. Contrary to the popular impression, these students as a class are idealistic in the best sense. Experience shows that they are responsive to reality and do not shrink from large and difficult undertakings. Most of the state institutions are still in a plastic condition, owing to their comparative youth and rapid growth. It is not difficult, therefore, to influence them profoundly with the missionary ideal. There is not one of these institutions which could not with proper cultivation be made a centre of genuine and expanding missionary spirit. Each one of them should furnish an increasing number of missionaries. Possibly they will not yield as large a proportion of volunteers who will become regular ordained missionaries. On the other hand, more than other colleges, they should furnish the men and women who will be needed in increasing numbers for the specialized forms of missionary work such as the educational, the medical, the industrial, the literary, the administrative, also for the work among special classes such as young men and young women.

As these are government universities and not under the supervision and control of the Churches, the Student Volunteer Movement and the related Association Movements are under special obligation to give them the missionary outlook, to cultivate in them the missionary spirit and to call forth from them missionary recruits. It is especially gratifying to note that some of the leading Christian denominations have come to recognize their responsibility for safeguarding at these centres the religious interests of the young men and young women belonging to their respective Communions, and are putting forth effective efforts to accomplish this end. It is to be hoped that everything possible will be done to develop in these large student communities well equipped Christian Churches, and that in charge of them may be placed ministers of such experience and gifts of personality and leadership that they will command the intellectual and spiritual confidence of the students and professors, and thus be in a position to influence pronouncedly their religious life. All this will tend to prepare the ground for bringing forth the large missionary fruitage which we have a right to expect from these important educational institutions.

Quite as important as augmenting the number of volunteers is the work of increasing their efficiency. The success of Christian missions on the foreign field depends, under God, on the qualifications and preparation of the missionaries. This point received great emphasis at the Edinburgh Conference and in the series of Continuation Committee Conferences recently held throughout Asia. Student volunteers should be given to understand that in the judgment of the wisest missionaries a much more thorough training of missionary candidates while on the home field is called for today than in the past. This is due to the great advance in the education of the peoples in the non-Christian world, including the native Christian communities. It is occasioned also by the marked growth of the spirit of independence in the native Churches. It is demanded by the abler leadership of the forces of the non-Christian religions. It is made necessary by certain dangerous tendencies, including that of syncretism or electicism. Moreover, if the Church is to take and hold a position of leadership among the educated and influential classes, its native workers must receive more advanced training; and this, in turn, calls for even better qualified missionaries than in the earlier and simpler stages of the missionary enterprise.

In view of these more exacting educational requirements, it is a ground for sincere gratitude that as a result of the Edinburgh Conference there has been established in North America, as well as in Great Britain, a Board of Missionary Preparation, and also that, owing to the same initiative, there are being organized in different mission fields union language schools. These agencies have been called into being to facilitate the better preparation of missionary candidates. Steps are being taken to bring about a closer coördination between what is done on the home field to further missionary preparation and what is done on the foreign field.

The recent Continuation Committee Conferences in Asia strongly urged that the volunteer, in addition to securing a general education as complete in all respects as that required for corresponding work at home, should have opportunity, if possible, before going out to the mission field to study such subjects as the following: The history and philosophy of the religions of the country to which he goes, as well as the subject of comparative religion; the history, social conditions and characteristics of the people to whom he is to minister; the history and methods of Christian missions, especially of the land where he is to work; exceptionally full and thorough Bible study, actual experience and training in personal work and other forms of evangelistic effort; bookkeeping and business methods; philology and the principles of phonetics; and, in many cases, the theory and practice of teaching.

To secure all or even a large part of this special preparation will not be easy. Few, if any, of the Mission Boards themselves make provision for affording such preparation. Unfortunately, moreover, few of the colleges and theological seminaries provide the necessary facilities. It is the belief of many that the curricula of the theological seminaries and of some of the denominational colleges should be radically revised with reference to furnishing more specific preparation for the foreign missionary career. In far too many institutions of this kind the instruction and other facilities afforded are not calculated to give students a true and large comprehension of the races to which they are to minister, of the religions or systems of belief which they must meet, of the present-day statement of the Christian message which will win its way most largely, of the growing sense of the expansion of the Kingdom, and of the time of all times in which we live and work. It is believed that it will be better for our existing denominational institutions to adapt themselves to meet these needs than to have established special missionary training institutions as has been done so largely in European countries. Possibly much could be done in a temporary way by the Board of Missionary Preparation in furnishing Summer Courses such as those provided during the past two summers in Great Britain by the Board of Mission Studies.

It seems to be the impression also among the volunteers now on the mission field that it would be well for the Boards to allocate intending missionaries to the fields to which they are to be sent much earlier than is now usually done, in order that they may sooner begin to specialize in their preparation. While the Volunteer Movement is primarily a recruiting agency as contrasted with a training agency, it should preserve the most intimate relation with the Board of Missionary Preparation, and should seek to do all in its power to fulfil the expressed wishes of the Mission Boards in furthering the best possible preparation of its members for the exacting requirements of the missionary career. We should continue to stand in season and out of season for the most thorough preparation and should enroll as volunteers only students who possess strong character, power of initiative, gifts of true leadership, consciousness of divine call, and willingness to pay what it costs to secure an unusually complete preparation.

For every reason this Convention should mark the greatest advance in mission study ever made in the institutions of North America. We should augment the number in study classes literally by the tens of thousands. What reasons were there which influenced the forty thousand who engaged in such study last year, that do not apply with equal force to the over one hundred thousand other Christian students who are not now identified with these classes? The plans recently introduced for the closer correlation of the mission study with Bible and social problems study should contribute largely to this end. The statistics show that of the total number enlisted in mission study in the colleges, three-fifths are women students. As the number of men students in both the United States and Canada exceeds the number of women students, it suggests that far greater emphasis than heretofore must be placed on pressing this propaganda among the men students. While there has been an encouraging increase in the number of study classes in medical colleges, there is an imperative demand that this number be greatly enlarged, especially in view of the fact that so many of the Missionary Societies are finding it impossible to secure a sufficient number of candidates for the influential medical missionary service. It is vitally important also that hundreds of mission study groups be formed in the normal schools, owing to the special influence which the teachers have in all our communities and Churches.

As the preparatory and high schools are the keys to the colleges and universities, the time has come when we must put forth wise but aggressive efforts to enlist a multitude of the school boys and school girls in the study of missionary biography as well as of certain aspects of the missionary movement. This is desirable not only for the sake of preparing those who are later to enter the colleges, there to be brought under the influence of the Volunteer appeal, but also for the sake of that vastly larger number who do not proceed to college.

It is a great mistake also that in many theological seminaries the study of missions is so seriously neglected. An investigation has revealed the fact that only about one-third of the 172 theological seminaries and theological colleges in the United States and Canada make a serious attempt in connection with their curricula to provide adequate instruction on the subject of Christian missions; that one-third furnish partial provision, and that the remaining one-third entirely ignore the subject. There is thus added reason why the voluntary study of Christian missions should be greatly promoted among theological students. The fact that not a few of these students have been in mission study classes in their undergraduate days should not be allowed to weaken the force of this emphasis, because it is expected that the leaders of the Churches shall have a more comprehensive and advanced knowledge of the subject than other members of the educated classes. How otherwise the Christian Church is to be led to perform her full duty in this great missionary age is more than can be seen.

The matter of augmenting the numbers engaged in mission study should be grappled with by every delegation in this Convention, for in accomplishing this purpose we facilitate the realization of all our other missionary desires and obligations. The plans recently introduced for the closer correlation of the mission study with the Bible study and social problems study should be of very great help. The example of what has been accomplished in some institutions should stimulate the rest of us. If it has been possible at the University of Toronto to have, as was the case during one year since the Rochester Convention, over six hundred students in mission study circles, it is possible to have from five hundred to one thousand engaged in such study in each of thirty or more other large universities represented in this Convention. If it has been possible to have twenty classes with an aggregate of over two hundred members in William Jewell College, one of our typical denominational colleges, there are at least three hundred other denominational colleges represented in the Convention, nearly all of which might have as many, were the delegates present to devote themselves energetically and persistently to accomplishing this result. If it has been possible for one women's college in Virginia to have nearly four hundred of its students enlisted in mission study, and, in addition, one mission study class composed of twenty of the teachers and professors, then the delegates from other women's colleges may well ask themselves whether much larger things are not possible in each of their fields.

It is of first importance that this work of mission study be conducted in a genuinely spiritual manner. Otherwise, mission study is dangerous, because through this means we bring vividly before young men and young women at the most impressionable time in life some of the gravest problems and deepest needs of the human race, some of the most inspiring opportunities ever known, and some of the greatest trusts which God has ever committed to a generation of Christians. A further and determining reason why this whole work should be carried on in the spirit of prayerful dependence on God, is that it involves the possible revelation of His will for the lives of all who engage in such study, and through them for other lives and even nations. This suggests that above all things, in season and out of season, the leaders of mission study in each institution should bear in mind the objective of all such study—that is, the leading of the students to adjust their lives honestly and courageously to the new knowledge which they receive. Mission study should be regarded as a failure and a danger unless it results in a large and more intelligent consecration of those who engage in such study to the great task of the world-wide establishment of Christ's Kingdom.

Among the many things which the Volunteer Movement is called upon to do, it is well to keep clearly in mind that our central responsibility is that of projecting our members into the mission fields. Nothing else can take the place of lives thus transplanted and lived out in the non-Christian lands. Unless there be a constant human stream flowing out from our American and Canadian universities to the ends of the earth this Movement cannot preserve its reality, its contagious enthusiasm and its world-conquering power. We should give most thorough-going study and intense attention, therefore, to the development of our Candidates Department. The Church has a right to expect that a Department like this, which is in constant and intimate touch with all the sending agencies and with the principal sources of supply, should become increasingly expert on the subject of the discovery and releasing of men qualified to meet immediate needs. To this end we welcome the frank, constructive criticism and suggestions of board secretaries, missionaries, students and others who are in a position to throw any light on this question, which is the very crux of one of the most vital problems of Christian missions.

While the Candidates Department of the Volunteer Movement should do all that it can, there is a part which can best if not only be done by the Mission Boards themselves. Each Missionary Society should have its own Candidates Department, and each of the principal Societies should have a secretary devoting all or a large part of his time to the work of dealing with candidates. He should be a man of experience, wide knowledge, much sympathy and tact, as well as of marked sincerity and courage. The lack of such Candidates Departments and secretaries among the Societies goes far to explain why the results of the volunteer propaganda have not been more largely conserved. The Mission Boards only are in a position to deal authoritatively with young men and young women who have decided to become missionaries, for the simple reason that they are the sending societies, whereas, the Volunteer Movement is solely a recruiting agency. Why should each Board build up an efficient Candidates Department? It should do so in order to weed out early any volunteers who, it believes, in the light of its expert knowledge, cannot qualify to go out as missionaries. It should do so in order to help hold suitable volunteers true to their life purpose. It should do so in order to enable all volunteers to secure a more nearly adequate preparation for their life career. The existence of the Board of Missionary Preparation accentuates the need of such a Candidates Department in each Mission Board, because the ideals of this new agency as to more thorough preparation cannot be realized until there are those representing the Missionary Societies who can deal authoritatively with candidates as to the kind of preparation which they should have. Without doubt the following of this plan will result in greatly increasing the likelihood of each Board having a sufficient number of good men available to meet the requirements of its work.

In our report this year we would call attention to the presence in our North American institutions of higher learning of the large and increasing number of students from Oriental and other non-Christian countries. These student migrations bid fair to increase in volume. The students who have thus come among us will on their return to their native lands wield an unusually large influence. This is particularly true of those coming from lands like China, which are in such a plastic condition and which are now adopting the Western civilization. The members of the Volunteer Movement, as well as of the all-embracing Student Christian Association Movements, should interest themselves in the most genuine and whole-hearted manner in these students who are to become the leaders of tomorrow in their important nations. We should befriend them in every way in our power, seeking to facilitate their plans and to render them practical service. We should see that they are exposed fully to the best side of our civilization, and are led to understand clearly that what they most admire and we most value in our national and social life is traceable to the principles and spirit of pure Christianity, and that the things about our civilization which most displease them as well as ourselves are due not to Jesus Christ, but to the lack of Jesus Christ. We should lead them to investigate thoroughly the teachings of our religion, and especially the life and work of Christ Himself. We should seek to guide them into a reasonable and vital faith in the living Christ, and should pray that an increasing number of them may devote their lives to the service of Christ in their native lands, some as Christian ministers and others as lay leaders. These men and women, who in so many cases represent the flower of the lands from which they come, were they to consecrate their lives to Christ's cause, could do far more to advance His Kingdom among their people than an equal number of foreign missionaries.

We note with keenest appreciation the development in our student field of the Chinese Students' Christian Association, which is doing such a remarkable work among the Chinese students; and also that most encouraging beginnings are being made by the Christian students of other nationalities to render a similar service among their countrymen in our colleges. We rejoice in the presence of so many of the Oriental students in this Convention. We should gladly coöperate with them in any ways which they may indicate for the accomplishment of their high aims. It is well that we American and Canadian students remind ourselves of the great reflex benefits which will come from the development of the work of Christ among the students from non-Christian lands now in North America and from intimate association with them. What will it not do in the widening of our sympathies, in the strengthening and enriching of our own faith, in the enlarging of our hope in the ultimate victory. Moreover, it will make more vivid and real to us the meaning of the missionary enterprise. It will do much to promote international goodwill. It will make possible that larger unity in which the leaders and workers of the different nations and races come to recognize how indispensable they are to each other. Above all, it will give each of us a larger Christ, for the more deeply we enter into fellowship with the Christians of other lands and others races, the more clearly we see that He has required all of the different members of his world-wide family through whom to express adequately His excellencies and to communicate His power.

The most critical battlefield from the point of view of the Volunteer Movement is not the Moslem world, not the educated classes of Japan, not the literati of China, not the citadels of Hinduism, not the areas of neglect in Latin America, but our own American and Canadian universities and colleges. If the Churches of North America are to wage triumphant warfare in these distant, difficult fields which call today so loudly for our help, the missionary facts and spirit must first dominate our own seats of learning. If we are to go forth to attempt world conquest we must have no untaken forts in our rear. This attaches the greatest possible importance to all well-considered efforts to promote the moral and religious welfare of the North American student field. The moral evils, the prevailing student temptations, the unfavorable college traditions and customs, and everything else in modern college life which is contrary to the teachings and spirit of Christ, must be overthrown if there is to be most largely developed among us truly world-conquering power. If we are to go forth with unshakable confidence to preach Christ as a world Saviour we must know beyond peradventure His saving power in our own lives and in the lives of our fellow students.

We must be able to present Christ and His work in terms that will command the intellectual and spiritual assent of the most thoughtful men in our own universities, if we are to have a message which will challenge the attention and win the intellectual confidence of the educated classes of the Orient and of Latin America. If the colleges and seminaries are to furnish the missionary consecration requisite to meet the demands of the Mission Boards and of the mission fields, they must be brought under the wonderful sway of the Living Christ Himself. To this end we should give ourselves even more than heretofore to the promotion of thorough, constructive, reverent study of the Scriptures. We should seek to kindle the evangelistic fires far and wide among the students of North America.

We should try to discover and utilize for apologetic lectures and writing and for evangelistic work a larger number of our best Christian ministers and professors. The social study and social service program of our Student Movements should be pressed with the greatest vigor and intelligence. The leaders of the Christian forces should seek in every way to promote united prayer on behalf of students. Thus will be supplied the conditions essential to the raising up of a sufficient number of student volunteers to meet the present world situation.

Moreover, what is of equal importance, the students to whom the way does not open providentially to go out as missionaries, will be led to recognize with conviction and to accept cheerfully their equal responsibility to sustain the student volunteers by their prayers, by their sacrifices, by their intelligent advocacy, and by their aggressive work for world-wide missions. For the proper maintenance of this world-wide enterprise there must be a very strong home base in North America. It must be so strong, and therefore its Christianity must be so vital, that the impact of the United States and Canada on the non-Christian world through commerce, through industry, through political relations, through social contacts, through the mingling of students, investigators and travelers, shall be a Christian impact. Those who represent us abroad in these other relations must speak the same voice to non-Christian peoples which these peoples hear from our missionaries. Moreover, as the representatives of these lands come within our gates they must find that the Christianity being lived and applied among us here agrees essentially with the claims made for it by the missionaries whom we send to them. Only a Gospel and a Christian spirit which show themselves able to deal successfully with the sad and tragic social facts of our North American communities can break the power of caste in India and lift the other indescribably great social burdens which so heavily oppress the inhabitants of Asia and Africa.

There is need of placing stronger emphasis than ever upon the Watchword of the Movement—"The Evangelization of the World in this Generation." Nearly a generation has elapsed since this Watchword was adopted. The question has been raised in one quarter whether it might not be wise to abandon the Watchword in view of the fact that a generation has gone and the world still remains unevangelized. This reveals evident misunderstanding. From the beginning the Movement has insisted that although the Watchword was to be taken as an ideal for the Movement as a whole, the secret of realizing it lay in having a sufficient number, not only of individual student volunteers, but also of other individual Christians, adopt it as their personal watchword and as a governing principle in their lives. Therefore, the Movement has constantly sought to multiply the number of those who would bring their lives under the sway of this ideal and purpose. Who will say that the Movement did not do its duty in taking this inspiring idea as one of its great objectives? Who will say that had a sufficient number of Christians accepted the Watchword as their own, the necessary facts about Christ might not have been brought to the attention of all men? Judged by the influence which the Watchword has had upon the lives of those who have accepted it, it seems entirely reasonable to infer that had Christians far more widely been brought under its influence, this great ideal might have been translated from theory into fact.

What have been some of the results of the Watchword where it has been proclaimed and most widely accepted? It has arrested the attention of earnest men and compelled them to consider the claims of world-wide missions; it has emphasized as no other one thing the urgency of the task of world evangelization; it has served as a constant reminder of the fact that making Christ known is a living question and not a matter for mere reflection and discussion; it has developed decision of character in dealing with the great and pressing missionary facts; it has attracted heroic men everywhere—men who shrink not from vast and most difficult undertakings; it has called out the latent energies of the students of our day as no other challenge which has been presented to them, and has developed some of the most attractive and solid traits of Christian character; it has widely promoted unity and coöperation because the very magnitude and difficulty of the task have helped to fuse together the coming leaders of the Christian forces; it has led to a larger discovery of God and a deepening acquaintance with Him, and has for an increasing number lifted the whole missionary enterprise to the superhuman plane. The more earnestly the Watchword has been discussed and criticised, the more strongly have men come to believe in it as expressing the solemn obligation resting upon the Christians of our day. It is a most striking fact that as the Volunteers have gone to the front, and have become more familiar with the difficulties and conditions obtaining on the mission field, their belief in the providential character and need of such a Watchword has in most cases been intensified rather than weakened.

If such a Watchword has been appropriate in the past, what shall we not say of its aptness and timeliness for the present day. The present is a time of unprecedented opportunity. Never has there been a time when simultaneously in so many parts of the world the doors were so wide open as now. It is a time of unprecedented danger. Above all, it is a time of unprecedented urgency owing to the fact that so many nations are in a plastic and changing condition, owing to the growing spirit of nationalism and racial patriotism, owing to the rapid spread of the corrupt influences of our so-called Western civilization, owing to the dangerous tendencies in connection with the non-Christian religions, owing to the recent unparalleled triumphs of Christianity and the rising tide of spiritual success on every hand, and owing to the possibility of entering into the marvelous heritage prepared by the recent period of thorough preparation. Why has God made the world known and accessible today as never before? Why has He provided such extensive and well-equipped missionary agencies at the home base and on the foreign field in our day? Why has He at this particular time placed such boundless resources at the disposal of the Church? Surely such vast preparations must have been made for some great and commensurate purpose. Can we question, in view of the character of God and the present day facts of the world, that it is His will that the whole field be occupied and evangelized in our day, and that, however great and difficult the undertaking, there are resources in our Lord Jesus Christ and latent in His followers available and sufficient to enable us to carry out that will.

If the years right at hand are to witness what is easily possible, the entering more largely than we have dreamed into the realization of the Watchword, the plans of the Church must be widened accordingly. In honesty it must be said that these plans today do not make the impression upon one that it is the deliberate and dominating purpose of Christian missions to make the living Christ known to all living men in our day. The time has come when there can no longer be any reasonable excuse for not taking literally the whole world into our plan. A half generation hence it should not be possible to point to an unoccupied field or to any considerable area in which it is impossible for men to know the essential facts concerning the mission of Christ. To this end let the members and friends of our Movement reassert with fresh conviction the obligation embodied in our inspiring Watchword. Two things in particular should be emphasized. In the first place let each Volunteer and each Christian student make the Watchword his personal Watchword. This means that we will let it influence our ideals, our motives, our attitude, our spirit and our habits. It means that we will let it determine the use of all our talents, whether they are talents of time, money, opportunity, strength, or influence. It means that we will study its bearings on our preparation, on the time of our pressing out to the field, and on the manner and method of our work. In short, it involves our making it a governing or guiding principle in all our life and relationships.

In the second place, we who take the Watchword as our own should persistently plan to get other Christians to accept it as their ideal and governing principle. A serious mistake has been made by us in neglecting to do this. We have assumed too much that others would learn about the Watchword and be interested in it and adopt it on their own initiative. Experience shows that this is not the case. In our propaganda we cannot wisely omit for even one year giving great prominence to this dynamic and quickening idea. We must wage a constant educational campaign on the subject. Each year there should be in every institution of higher learning in North America at least one study circle having as the basis for its study the book on the Watchword, or the one on the Decisive Hour of Christian Missions, or the one on Unoccupied Mission Fields, or some other theme which lends itself to creating clear and strong convictions upon the urgency of the task. Far wider use should be made of the pamphlet literature bearing on this subject. Speakers and writers should be called upon as in earlier years to treat the theme in an up-to-date, practical and convincing manner. We should welcome the most penetrating criticism and discussion of all the subjects involved in the understanding of the Watchword and in its application to the missionary problem. We should give ourselves to personal siege work with men and women who are in a position to have large influence for or against the realization of this God-given ideal, that they in turn may become most helpful propagandists. We do a great injustice to our fellow students and other Christians if we do not give them the benefit which will come to their lives as a result of accepting with full knowledge and conviction this new and powerful motive which has done so much to enlarge the views, the lives, the plans and the practical coöperation of all who have come fully under its power.

A unique responsibility rests on the delegates of this Convention. Never in the history of the student world has there been a Convention in which so many Christian students have come together to face the wholeness of the task and the oneness of the task which confronts the forces of Christianity in the non-Christian world. Never has a body of Christian students been exposed to such a flood of light on the needs and opportunities of the less favored lands and races of their generation. Never has there assembled a company of educated men and women with so great latent energies to place at the disposal of Christ for the accomplishment of His world-wide purpose. "Unto whomsoever much has been given of him shall much be required." In view of the great things which we have received in the universities and colleges of these two great lands of privilege, and in view of the wonderful vision and opportunity which come to us in this remarkable Convention, what does our Lord Jesus Christ require of us?

Christ requires that each of us individually place himself absolutely and irrevocably at His disposal, henceforth to do His will and not our own. Let us be thorough-going and decisive on this point, cost what it may. Right here lies our most strategic battle-ground. If we win on this field, that is, if we let Him dominate here, all else can be accomplished.

Are we not called to make the ideal set forth in the Watchword our personal ideal and to resolve to let it govern the shaping of our plans, the use of our powers and the outreach of our influence?

Is it not the wish of Christ that the members of each delegation shall seek corporately to study how we can do most to realize in our separate colleges the advanced policy of the Convention as set forth in this report? Let us not be satisfied with things as they are, even at the best. Let us remember how God has mightily used the delegates of preceding Conventions as they have returned to their universities, colleges and seminaries. May the Kansas City Convention be no exception in this vital respect. Rather, as a result of each delegation becoming closely united and catching the vision of the new and vastly larger spiritual possibilities, let its members give themselves to prayer, and be inspired to usher in a new era in all that pertains to giving Christ and the plans of His Kingdom their proper central place in the life of the institution. Let us not be satisfied with small things when God so obviously desires and designs that we attempt large things for Him. Our plans have been regulated too much by precedent and by our visible resources. Let them henceforth be determined rather in the light of the character and plans of God and of our invisible but aboundingly sufficient superhuman resources.

Does not Christ desire that we as a Convention associate our efforts, our gifts and our sacrifices, that the beneficent work of the Volunteer Movement be very greatly enlarged? Why should its valuable service be limited to four or five hundred institutions each year when a thousand colleges and universities stand in so great need of its practical and spiritual helpfulness?

Christ summons us to more faithful intercession, and also to enlist others as intercessors. Beyond question this is the primary need of the Church today. In view of the vastness of our missionary task, its baffling difficulties, the impending critical dangers, and the pressing urgency of the undertaking to make Christ known to all men in our day, nothing less than a marvelous manifestation of superhuman wisdom, superhuman love and superhuman power will avail. History clearly teaches that such a manifestation is conditioned on the faithfulness of the Christians in prayer. The most highly multiplying thing, therefore, which we can do in this Convention, and as we go forth from it, is to seek as never before to enter into the life of intercession and to lead others to join us in the discovery of its boundless possibilities.
